Congress is obliged to increase the awareness of the American public regarding the extent of Soviet intelligence activities against this country, says Sen. Malcolm Wallop R-Wyo. He asserts that infiltration by the Soviet KGB, GRU and the International Department of the Soviet Communist Party's Central Committee extends from "sophisticated, long-term efforts to steal American interests" to "interception of the average citizens' phone calls . . ."

The problem, Mr. Wallop says, rests with the recent obsession of abuses tagged to the CIA and FBI, and with the "complexes" of those agencies regarding counterintelligence. Mr. Wallop has urged the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, which he served on for eight years as chairman of the budget subcommittee, to hold hearings and publish documents "to inform the American people of what we are up against."
